In Brief News & View from the World of Harpsichords...

Issue #22 Autumn 1993

As part of the Sydney Festival, duo-harpsichord team Tony and Jan Jennings gave a very entertaining recital which was broadcast from the ABC Ultimo Centre...

It will be a bumper harpsichord year at the Melbourne Organ & Harpsichord Festival this year, with special guest Colin Tilney from Toronto joined by local performers Linda Kent, Priscilla Alderton and Priscilla Taylor. And Australian Peter Hagen makes a quick trip back from study with Bob van Asperen in The Netherlands specially for a MIFOH solo recital...

There was a little risqué-taking early music in the Vittel Free Lunchtime Concert series at the Sydney Opera House. Harpsichordist Luke Green led a young group called Four Play Trios in the Northern Foyer performance. And if the name of the group seems odd, you do need four people to play trios if you follow continuo tradition and bolster the bass line with at least a cello or gamba. You can go further if you wish and add multiple instruments according to good taste and style...

The Brandenburg Orchestra makes its opera debut this summer season with The Australian Opera production of Monteverdi's L'incoronazione di Poppea. Conducted by Richard Divall, this is the first time we hear an original instrument orchestra accompanying the singers from the Opera Theatre pit. The mammoth continuo team has two harpsichords, chamber organ, cello and gamba, as well as an assortment of plucked strings like theorbo, chitarrone, lute and guitars...

Ray Harvey appeared in Sydney, Canberra and Melbourne in late January as harpsichordist with the Australian Chamber Orchestra conducted by Christopher Hogwood...

London-based Neal da Costa will be leading his 8 or 9 player original instrument group Florilegium from the keyboard around Australia in August. Channel Classics, a Dutch company, has enthusiastically invested over £12000 in their first recording of the group...

Also in touring mode, mid-April sees intrepid Audley Green taking to the road from Brisbane to Melbourne and points between with her Schaumlöffel harpsichord. And Californian Jennifer Paul's visit later in the year includes an appearance at the Schureck Collection...

For Harpsichord Owners...

If you only do it once a year, replacing a broken string might prove more difficult for you than a professional who might string twenty whole instruments in the same period. While it is nice to be able to exactly match the appearance of the existing strings, you should be mainly concerned with winding a replacement that will hold pitch without breaking. Choose wire of the correct gauge and material, and unroll at least a metre when winding the loop so you don't force a permanent twist in your string, making it impossible to tune. And be sure your winding is a double helix, avoiding a collapsible noose with one strand wrapped around a central core. Get rid of the loose end of wire at the tuning pin, because your string will surely break if it crosses over itself as it leaves the pin. For those pins with holes, you don't need to wrap any of the wire over itself. Wind down the pin, and try to match the angle of the original strings as they leave their pins up to the nut.

Harpsichords should not break strings without reason. Keep your ear out for pitch rise during the cooler, more humid weather. Remember that the soft wire most makers are now using for tonal reasons will break like a thread if kinked or mishandled in any way. And play the note while you are tuning to make sure you are on the right pin! Keep enough wire on hand for the odd emergency (especially the smaller sizes of brass for the top strings of the crossover) and store the coils tidy and dry. For more information, ring our workshop or refer to Kottick's invaluable book The Harpsichord Owner's Guide.

As well as wire in several materials and gauges, we stock hundreds of different bits and pieces for maintaining, tuning, and decorating all sorts of early keyboard instruments. Please request our Spare Parts Price List. We are now using the new Express Post facility from Australia Post for small parts orders up to $75 value, for areas where this improves delivery time.
